

MILLER MURRAY SUSEN

Miller Murray Susen grew up in the Charlottesville theatre community, appearing in over 30 productions before she turned 18. She attended the summer arts camp in musical theatre at Interlochen Center for the Arts, and was a delegate in theatre to the Virginia Governor's School for Visual and Performing Arts. She attended Cornell University, where she directed student-run theatre and music groups. Then she wandered in the wilderness of academic publishing and professional web design for a long, sorrowful period.

In recent years she has found her way back to her first love, appearing on local stages at Live Arts, Play On, Four County Players, The Bridge, The Jefferson, and the parking lot of the Blue Moon diner, and teaching youth drama classes at Live Arts and Venable Elementary school. She delights in introducing children to the creative discipline that has brought so much happiness, friendship, and fun into her life.
